WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Tast sea of upturned frees—secreted the City Rich in front and side, and extended outside the limits of the Park. It was equal in numbers with any great gathering of the meases on any like occasion, and, indging from others, there was about 50,000 people present. A rapid discharge of rockets, bombs, and other arrial freworks, which illumined the sky and with a fine effect, was the appropriate preinde to a general display of fleeces which followed Some of the pieces were exceedingly beautiful and won the rapturous appliance of the crowd. The "Bow of Persia," the "Cross of Peru, the "Fee Mee," "Saturn and his Satellites." "Passion Flower" and "Fairies Frelie," were among the pretty fittes condured on the pieces. A representation of a golden waterfall like its name-sake worn by the isidies, creared considerable merriment on its upperature, and like that monstrosity for the year, after a brief show, was set aside. The pieces of suitable described for this celebration were the "Star of America," the "Star of Independence." Yankee Wind Mill," and the "Grand Temple of Liberty. The latter piece was the cluma to the whole, and cellipsed them all in beauty. Surrounding its beniers were numerous stars. Goddenses of Liberty and of Justice, while in the center of the whole, standing out in conspicuous relief was the fixer of him "who was first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrines." Underneath the figure were the words, "Washington, the Father of Our Country." At the continuer of the shape of the words of the display the crowd dispersed, and it was then that an loca of its magnitude and numbers could be formed. It was blee the interest of Donnyhook Fair everybedy rushing, pashing, swearing, and trying to extrigate the mashires from the swarning times.

The enuiversary was celebrated in the evening by various receptions, balls, meetings, and exercises.

The observance of the day was not confined, in this part of the world, to our own City. In Brooklyn there was a general suspension of business, a daplay of flags, the firing of salutes, and a general devotion to the partial of pleasure. In the evening there was an examination of the pupils of the Brooklyn Institute, and the ellevery of an address by the few. William Mills on the fig of Alexander Havilton. FORESEE past the days of gloom, The long, sad days of doubt and fear, When woman, by her idle loom, Heard the dread battle's nearing boom With clusped hands and straining ear; While each new hour the past pursues With further threat of loss and pain, Till the sick senses would refuse To longer drink the bloody news

> That told of sons and brothers slain, The days of calm at length are won, And, sitting thus, with folded hands, We talk of great deeds greatly done, While all the future seems to ran

A silvery tide o'er golden sands. With pomp the votive sword and shield The saviors of the land return; And while new shrines to Peace we build. On our great banner's azure field

Yet larger constellations burn ! Who bore the flag-who won the day? The young, proud manhood of the land,

Called from the force and plow away, They seized the weapons of the fray With eager but untutored hand: They swarmed o'er all the roads that led To where the peril hottest burned-

By night, by day, their hurrying trend Still Southward to the struggle sped. Nor ever from their purpose turned.

Why tell how long the contest hung, Now crowned with hope and now depressed And how the varying balance swung. Until, like gold in furnace flung,

The truth grew stronger for the test ? "I was our own blood we had to meet; Twas with full peers our swords were crossed.

Till in the march, assault, retreat, And in the school of stern defeat

We learned success at bloody cost.

Oh, comrades of the camp and deck All that is left by pitying Fate Of those who bore through fire and wreck, With sinewy arm and stubborn need His flag whose Birth we Celebrate!

Oh, men, whose names, forever bright On history's golden tablets graved-By land, by sea who waged the fight, What guerdon will you ask to-night For service done, for perils braved?

The charging lines no more we see, No more we hear the din of strife; Nor under every greenwood tree, Stretched in their life's great agony, Are those who wait the surgeon's knife; No more the dreaded stretchers drip, The jolting ambulances groan; No more, while all the senses slip, We hear from the soon silent Ep The prayer for death as balm alone!

And ye who, on the sea's bine breast, And down the rivers of the land, With clouds of thunder as a crest, Where still your conquering proves were pressed-Wai's lightning wielded in your hand! Ye, too, released, no longer feel The threat of battle, storm and roos-Torpedoes grating on the keel.

Joint Saviers of the Land! To-day What guerdon ask you of the land? No boon too great for you to pray -What can it give that could repay The men we miss from our worn band? The men who lie in trench and swamp. The dead who rock beneath the wave-

The brother souls of march and camp, Bright spirits-each a shining lamp, Teaching our children to be brave! And then-Great Shade! in whom was nursed

The germ and grandeur of our land-In peace, in war, in reverence first, Who taught our infancy to burst The tightening yoke of Britain's hand! Thou, too, from thy Celestial height Will join the prayer we make to-day-"Homes for the crippled in the fight, And, what of life is left, made bright By all that gratitude can pay."

Teach these who loll in gilded scats, With nodding plume and jeweled gown, Boasting a pedigree that dates Back to the men who swayed the fates When Thou wert battling Britain's crown-That ere the world a century swims Through time-this poor, blue-coated host,

With brevet-rank of shattered limbs, Will swell the fame in choral hymns And be of pride the proudest boast! Homes for the men we ask, implore: The brave who limbs and vigor gave,

That North and South, from shore to shore, One free, rich, boundless country o'er, The flug of Washingron should wave! The flag that first-the day recall-Long years ago, one Summer morn, Flashed up o'er Independence Hall, A meteor-messenger to all, That a new Nation here was born !

Oh, wives and daughters of the land! To every gentler impulse true, To you we raise the invoking hand, Take pity on our stricken band, These Demi-gods disguised in Blue! More sweet than coo of pairing birds Your voice when urging gentle deeds, And power and beauty clothe her words-

A West-wind through the heart's thrilled chords

When woman's voice for pity pleads.

To you I leave the soldier's doom, Your glistening eyes assure me right; Oh, think through many a night of gloom, When round you all was light and bloom, And he preparing for the fight-

The soldier bade his fancy roath Far from the foe's battalions proud-From camps, and hot steeds champing foam, And fondly on your breast at home The forehead of his spirit bowed

Oh, by the legions of the Dead, Whose ears even yet our love may reach-Whose souls, in fight or prison fled, Now swarm in column overhead. Winging with fire my faltering speech; From stricken fields and ocean caves I hear their voice and ery instead -

6 Gazing upon our myriad graves, He generous to the crippled braves Who were the Comrades of the Dead!"

Our Cause was holy to the hight Of holiest cause to manhood given; For Peace and Liberty to smite, And while the warm blood bounded bright, For these to die, if called by Heaven! The dead are cared for-in the clay The grinning skull no laurel sucks; But for the wounded of the fray

The ORDER OF THE LEGION speaks! Abolition of Slavery at the North. BRATTLEBORO', Vt., Feb. 16, 1856,

It is through my weak lips to-day

To the Hon, GROBER BANCROFT, New-York. DEAR SIR: My attention has been arrested by a passage in the enlogy pronounced by you on the burg " with its lonely and solemn flagstaff, late President Lincoln, which, as a matter of history requires, it seems to me, some explanation. You state that, "at the North the growth of Slavery was arrested by natural causes." That is, as I understand you, physical and material conditions which rendered its estinuance materially unprofitable there.

I am aware that this statement has been made by the Southern States as an accusation and reproach against the North; and it has been relierated time and again in Congress, in stump speeches, and in newspapers, until it has come to be believed by many, and perhaps by the majority. But is it the fact! Was not Slavery in Connecticut, New York, Now-Jersey and Pernaylvania abolished wholly or in part because the articles of agreement entered into by them in the adoption of the Constitution. It cannot be denied that the original Constitution, properly interpreted and administered, is death to Slavery; and under its provisions the abolition of Slavery absolutely began in the North, and went on, until its further progress was arrosted by the States which have recently broken out into open rebellion. The very act of arresting the movement was incipient rebellion against the Constitution of the United States. Again, in pursuing the same subject, you state that, under the old deciaration, viz: "that Slavery was an evil to be got rid of," every one of the States had retained, each for itself, the right of manumitting slaves by an ordinary act of legislation. Is this a pure historical fact? Instead of retaining the right to abolish Slavery, was at not the day of every State, under the Constitution, to sholish it? Could any less sense of the obligations of the Constitution on the part of the States be of sufficient force to form and preserve the Union?

Union?

The time has arrived when accuracy of ideas and terms is necessary for the settlement of our difficulties, if we would remain a Republic, and hence I have taken the liberty to address you through the public prints. And I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obediest servant,

J. W. PERLIE.

A sweet, soft February day was chosen—a day which melted into a cloudless, starry night—a day already sucred to the people as baving given to them the best spirit of their first crusade for Liberty. It was fitting that on Washingtone Birthday the wealth and social eminence of the city should know, in the foremost man of this later struggle, the triumph of the new, and just, and bonorable significance which the Declaration of [Signed.]
